

ActiveSG credits expire on 31 December 2026: one transaction rolls them into 2027

Description

Check your MyActiveSG+ app this week: ActiveSG credits expire on 31 December 2026 unless your account records at least one transaction before then. The $100 SG60 top-up was given a one-off extension to the end of 2026, and the governmentâ??s rule is that credits roll over to the next year only if you have used them at least once. That leaves about a month to turn a lapsing balance into workouts.

The good news is that one paid transaction is all it takes, and credits stretch further on health and fitness than most people realise.

How the ActiveSG credits expire rule works

- All ActiveSG members got a one-off automatic extension of their credits to 31 December 2026.
- After that date, unused credits roll over if there is at least one transaction in 2026.
- A transaction means a successful facility booking, programme registration or pass purchase, paid for with credits or cash.
- For a linked child account, a paid transaction for that child before 31 December 2026 extends the childâ??s credits to 31 December 2027.

Sport Singapore said that as of 30 September 2025, over 1.1 million members had claimed the SG60 credits and just over 40 per cent had made at least one transaction. If you are in the other 60 per cent, this is your reminder.

What your credits can pay for ActiveSG credits can fully cover booking fees for ActiveSG sport facilities and entry to gym and pool passes. They also offset programme fees, and the share depends on the programme type.

- Active Health programmes: up to 100 per cent of the cost.
- School Holiday programmes: up to 60 per cent.
- Other programmes, including Learn-To-Play and ActiveSG Academies and Clubs: up to 30 per cent.
- Dual-Use Scheme facilities: over 370 school facilities, such as sports halls and fields, open to the public on Saturday afternoons and evenings and on Sundays.

Bookings go through MyActiveSG+. The Active Health route is the one worth a look if you want something that counts for your health rather than just your court time. We covered one example in our guide to Active Health STRENGTH 2.0, where four one-hour sessions are paid in full by credits.

Why strength work is a smart use of the balance

The Health Promotion Boardâ??s National Population Health Survey 2025 found that 87.3 per cent of residents did sufficient total physical activity, up from 84.7 per cent in 2024. Sufficient muscle-strengthening activity was only 37.6 per cent, and that figure has been stable since 2020.

So most of us walk, jog or cycle enough, but not many lift, squat or use resistance bands twice a week. If your credits are sitting idle, a strength-focused programme or a few gym passes is a sensible way to close that gap.

Quick ways to make one transaction count

1. Open MyActiveSG+ and check your credit balance and expiry date.
2. Book a gym or pool pass at your nearest ActiveSG sport centre, which is the quickest transaction.
3. Or register for an Active Health programme and let credits cover the whole fee.
4. If you have kids, make a paid booking on their linked accounts too, so their balance extends to the end of 2027.
5. Keep the confirmation, in case your balance does not update.

The 2026 basketball and hockey seasons under ActiveSG Academies and Clubs cost S$130 to S$185, and credits offset up to 30 per cent of programme fees, so they can soften the bill for a childâ??s sport.

What is still unconfirmed

The Ministry of Culture, Community and Youth has said it will study whether HPB Healthpoints can be converted into ActiveSG credits, but nothing has been confirmed. It has also not committed to regular top-ups. Treat your current balance as a one-off and use it before the deadline.

Different accounts can show different expiry dates, so rely on what MyActiveSG+ displays for you, and check Sport Singaporeâ??s FAQ if anything looks off.
