Description

The National Heritage Board (NHB)â??s annual Battle for Singapore returns from 15 February to 2 March 2025, in commemoration of the 83rd anniversary of the Fall of Singapore. From compelling stories of resilience to iconic wartime sites, this yearâ??s line-up of programmes invites participants to delve deeper into pivotal moments and experiences that have shaped the nation during its darkest days. Sites featured include Tengah Air Base, the first airfield to be captured when Japanese forces invaded Singapore, and Clifford Pier, the site which served as a key point of evacuation during World War II (WWII).

We are excited to organise another season of Battle for Singapore with immersive tours, interactive workshops and educational talks, many of which are being offered for the first time with the support of many partners including Museum Roundtable members. We hope this year’s participants will continue to be stirred and moved by being able to experience this pivotal period in Singapore’s history.”

During the Japanese Occupation of Singapore, military and civilian officials governing Singapore used a combination of State Shinto and sport to assist in culturally assimilating Singapore into Japan's Empire. A planned massive sports complex was to be located at Singapore's own State Shinto shrine, the Syonan Jinja, partly modelled on Japan's Meiji Shrine which regularly held on its own grounds sports events and games that mixed the rituals of State Shinto with athleticism. Participation in sport was used to assimilate local populations into an imperial identity united under the Japanese Emperor.
