

FairPrice May Day Deal: 50% Off Rice And Canola Oil For NTUC Members

Description

FairPrice May Day deal watchers have a practical grocery promotion to check if they are NTUC members or use the FairPrice Group app. NTUC's official deal page says the campaign offers selected essential products at 50% off, with the first window including Double FP Thai Hom Mali Rice 5kg and FairPrice Canola Oil 2L.

This is the kind of deal that matters because it covers staple items rather than discretionary treats. Rice and cooking oil are household basics, so the savings can be useful if the terms match your shopping routine. The important details are the validity window, membership requirement, stock limits and whether the app voucher condition applies.

What The First Offer Window Covers

The official NTUC page lists Double FP Thai Hom Mali Rice 5kg at S$7.05, down from a usual price of S$14.10, for the 30 April to 3 May window while stocks last. That is a meaningful cut for a staple item if your household uses jasmine rice regularly.

The same page lists FairPrice Canola Oil 2L at S$4.75, down from S$9.50, also for the 30 April to 3 May window while stocks last. The oil offer requires shoppers to apply a voucher and pay via the FairPrice Group app.

Because both items are essentials, demand may be high. Treat the promotion as a useful grocery top-up, not a guarantee that every outlet will have stock when you arrive.

Membership And App Conditions Matter

MAY DAY

NTUC MEMBERS SAVE

default watermark

50%
OFF

30 APR - 3 MAY

$7.05
PER PACK

DOUBLE FP
Thai Hom Mali
Premium Quality
Fragrant Rice
5kg
U.P. $14.10

The first FairPrice May Day offer lists Double FP Thai Hom Mali Rice 5kg at S$7.05.

The rice offer says shoppers should present an NTUC card or FairPrice Group app to enjoy the price. The oil offer is more app-specific because the page says shoppers need to apply the voucher and pay via the FairPrice Group app.

That distinction matters at checkout. If you are buying both items, make sure your membership status and app payment are ready before joining the queue. A deal can become frustrating quickly if the voucher is not visible or the app payment setup is incomplete.

The page also lists purchase limits: the rice is limited to two units per member per day, while the oil is limited to one unit per NTUC member throughout the promotion period.

Why This Deal Is Better Than A Random Basket Discount

default watermark

MAY DAY

NTUC MEMBERS SAVE

default watermark

50%
OFF

30 APR - 3 MAY

$4.75
PER BOTTLE

FAIRPRICE
Canola Oil 2L
U.P. $9.50

The FairPrice May Day oil offer lists FairPrice Canola Oil 2L at S$4.75.

Many supermarket promotions encourage shoppers to buy more than they planned. This one is easier to evaluate because the products are specific and the usual prices are stated on the official page.

A 5kg rice bag makes sense if your household consumes rice steadily and has storage space. It is less useful if you are buying only because the discount looks large. Oil is similar: check how much you already have at home before adding another bottle.

The best savings come when the item replaces a near-term purchase you were already going to make. That is especially true for essential goods, where household cashflow matters more than the excitement of a limited-time promotion.

How To Shop The Offer Cleanly

Before heading down, open the official NTUC deal page and confirm the current window. The first listed offers are tied to 30 April to 3 May, and the broader campaign language indicates selected products across Thursdays to Sundays until 17 May.

At the store, check the shelf label against the product size. The rice offer is for Double FP Thai Hom Mali Rice 5kg, and the oil offer is for FairPrice Canola Oil 2L. Similar-looking products may not qualify.

If you are using the app voucher, apply it before payment and confirm the final price on the screen. The safest checkout is the one where the discount is visible before you tap to pay.

Who Should Prioritise It

This promotion is most useful for households that cook regularly, already shop at FairPrice and can satisfy the NTUC membership or app condition without changing their routine.

It is less useful if you need to make a special trip across town or buy more than you can store. Grocery deals should reduce household costs, not create clutter or wasted food.

For families managing a weekly budget, the rice and oil offers are worth checking early in the day because stock and voucher availability may be the limiting factors.

How To Avoid Wasting The Savings

For staples, the main risk is buying beyond your actual household pace. Rice keeps well when stored properly, but a 5kg bag still needs dry space and should not sit near heat or moisture. Cooking oil should also be stored sensibly and used within a reasonable period.

If the item is out of stock at one outlet, do not spend too much time chasing it unless you are already nearby. The dollar saving is useful, but transport cost and time can eat into the benefit quickly.

Check whether the app voucher is tied to a single redemption. If it is, make sure the basket is correct before paying. Accidentally using a voucher on the wrong item or wrong account can remove the deal for the rest of the window.

For larger families, the rice limit may still be worthwhile even at two units per member per day. For smaller households, one bag may be enough, and the better move is to leave stock for people who genuinely need the pantry top-up.

Keep the receipt until you have checked the price line and voucher line. If the discount did not apply, it is easier to ask at the service counter immediately than to reconstruct the purchase after leaving the store. The app transaction history is also worth checking before you walk away.

Offer Details To Confirm

The FairPrice May Day deal's first listed rice and oil offers run from 30 April to 3 May while stocks last, with NTUC membership and FairPrice Group app conditions applying. Check the official NTUC page and your app voucher before checkout.

Related on Little Big Red Dot: IKEA High Five Singapore deals, Sofitel Mother's Day buffet deal, Changi Shopping Festival 2026.

Official links: NTUC FairPrice May Day deal.

Date Created

03/05/2026

Author

gracelim