If you have been sitting on the fence about a Japan trip, consider this your definitive sign to book. Right now, in mid-2026, Singaporeans enjoy a rare confluence of factors that make Japan travel exceptionally attractive â?? a historically strong Singapore Dollar, affordable flight options, a wealth of seasonal experiences, and an important deadline looming in July 2026 that will make your trip noticeably more expensive if you wait.

Here is everything you need to know about travelling from Singapore to Japan in 2026.

Why Singaporeans Should Book Japan Travel Before July 2026

Starting July 2026, Japanâ??s departure tax is set to triple. This additional cost will be applied to every traveller departing Japan, making your overall trip more expensive the longer you wait. On top of this, the JR Pass â?? the popular rail pass used by tourists to travel across Japan on bullet trains â?? is becoming more expensive from October 2026.

The window to visit Japan at todayâ??s prices is closing fast. If you can travel between now and June 2026, you will avoid both of these cost increases and enjoy Japan at its most accessible price point in years.

The Singapore Dollar vs. the Japanese Yen: An Extraordinary Opportunity

The Singapore Dollar is currently trading at approximately 115â??125 Japanese Yen â?? one of the strongest exchange rates ever recorded between the two currencies. In practical terms, this means your travel budget in Japan stretches significantly further than it did three or four years ago.

A bowl of ramen that costs Â¥1,200 works out to roughly S$10. A night in a good mid-range hotel in Tokyo that costs Â¥15,000 translates to around S$125. Even premium experiences â?? kaiseki dining, ryokan stays, and private onsen â?? are remarkably affordable by Singapore standards.

This currency advantage is a significant part of why over 726,200 Singaporeans travelled to Japan in 2025 alone, making it one of the most popular destinations for Singaporeans year after year.
