The studioâ??s New Bahru room hosts a short list of local makers this weekend. DiJiJoe Ceramics brings playful dinner-table pieces. Wen Xuan shows experimental glaze studies. Muddlechild leans quiet and nature-led. Lie Gian Siow brings porcelain florals, and more makers join them for the three-day run.

Made Here is built as a meet-the-maker market rather than a mall pop-up. You can ask how a glaze was fired or why a cup rim sits thick.

Coffee and matcha in cups you keep

PottersCafe is collaborating with The Pottersâ?? Guilt on single-origin coffee and matcha served in limited handcrafted cups. The cup leaves with you.

Getting there

New Bahru is about a seven-minute walk from Fort Canning MRT (Downtown Line).
