

National Gallery's Trick-or-Treat Family Fun runs this weekend until 1 November

Description

National Gallery Singapore's Trick-or-Treat Family Fun returns for a second year, with sessions this weekend on Saturday (24 October) and Sunday (25 October) and the last run on 1 November. Children aged three to 12 make their own trick-or-treat bucket and then follow a clue trail through the gallery collecting treats.

What families do

Each 90-minute session starts with a craft. Children make a paper mÃ¢chÃ© trick-or-treat bucket with ArtBeatz, then use it on a clue trail through the DBS Singapore Gallery, picking up treats along the way.

The bucket is a paper mÃ¢chÃ© base that children decorate with colour and texture before the hunt. The clues lead to selected artworks in the gallery and to stories from Singaporeâ??s past, so the trail doubles as a first look at the National Collection.

The whole programme runs indoors at the Gallery, which matters on a hazy weekend when outdoor plans are harder to keep.

Dates and times

Sessions on 4 and 10 October ran at 1pm and 3.30pm. The remaining dates are 24, 25 and 31 October and 1 November, with three sessions a day:

- 10.30am to 12pm
- 1pm to 2.30pm
- 3.30pm to 5pm

Families should arrive 10 minutes before their session.

Where

The programme runs at the Expression Workshop, Keppel Centre for Art Education, City Hall Wing Level 1.

Prices

- 1 parent and 1 child: S$68
- Each extra child: S$38
- Each extra parent: S$32

Tickets are sold online only, are non-refundable and include General Admission to the gallery. Each bundle admits one parent and one child aged three to 12.

Before you go

The UOB Southeast Asia Gallery is closed and reopens in late 2027, though works from the National Collection remain on show across the building. The current exhibition Passion is Volcanic: Desire in Southeast Asian Art is rated R18, so it is not part of a family visit.
