What you can pick up

Sake Inn says the racks cover sake, shochu and liqueurs from all over Japan. General sampling is free and unlimited, so you can taste your way down the aisles before committing to a bottle. It is a handy way to find out whether you prefer a rounded junmai or something crisp and dry.

A small premium section works differently. Premium bottles, normally worth up to S$350, are poured in 30ml servings that cost Sake Tickets, and each ticket starts from S$4. Sake Innâ??s page says a pour costs 1 to 4 tickets, while its FAQ says 1 to 5 depending on the bottle, so check the price at the counter. Tickets are sold before the event and at the tasting counter.

The sale also doubles as an early Christmas and Chinese New Year gift run. A bottle with a ribbon is an easy present for a host, a boss or a relative who already has everything, and bulk buyers can compare unit prices across the racks. Because stock is limited on some lines, it pays to arrive with a short list of must-haves and a budget, rather than wandering in kiasu and leaving with ten bottles you never planned to open.

Grab bags, credits and CNY pre-orders

- Sake Grab Bags: S$160 or more of sake and liqueurs from S$60 a bag, each bag different. A QR code inside lists exactly what you got, with tasting notes. Quantities are limited daily.
- Event credits: top up before the sale and Sake Inn adds bonus credits. Credits can only be bought before the event and offset purchases at the tills.
- 2027 Chinese New Year pre-orders: two limited sakes, Sawanoi Gold Eto from Tokyo and Koshiji Fubuki Eto Label from Niigata, at pre-order prices only available before the sale.

Even outside the sale, Sake Innâ??s online shop shows entry-level prices, such as the Kiku-Masamune Mandarin Orange Liqueur at S$22. That gives you a rough yardstick for judging the warehouse discounts on the day.

How to get there and what to bring

The warehouse sits between three MRT stations: Ubi (DT27), Kaki Bukit (DT26) and Eunos (EW7). Buses 25, 45, 51, 55, 87, 93, 94, 854 and 854e stop at Opp Comfort Driving Centre, the nearest stop named by Sake Inn. Drivers can use the paid parking at the warehouse building.

Payment on site is by QR code, such as PayNow, or with your pre-purchased credits. Delivery is free for orders above S$600, so a group of friends can pool a big order and skip the carrying. Pets are discouraged because the warehouse gets crowded with glass bottles.

Game plan for a smarter haul

1. RSVP first, and screenshot the confirmation for your free draft beer.
2. Decide on credits and Premium Sake Tickets early, since both must be bought before or at the event, depending on the item.
3. Go on Friday afternoon if you want the best pick of grab bags and CNY pre-order allocation.
4. Sample widely, then loop back to buy.
5. Sort out transport home for any heavy carton, or pool orders for free delivery.
