Scootâ??s Everywhere Sale is open from 10am on 15 September to 11.59pm on 20 September 2026 (Singapore time), with one-way fares from Singapore listed from S$79 inclusive of taxes on selected Scoot-operated flights. Book on flyscoot.com or the Scoot app.

Promotional travel windows are not one continuous block. They vary by city between late September 2026 and 31 August 2027, with blackouts around school holidays and event periods. Seats are limited, so the lowest fare will not appear on every date.

Sample one-way fares from Singapore

Short-haul starting points on the sale board include Malacca from S$79, Penang and Kuala Lumpur from S$82, Phuket from S$92, and Bali from S$105. Further out, Taipei is listed from S$130, Seoul from S$169, Osaka from S$210, Tokyo (Haneda) from S$225, and Sydney from S$240.

ScootPlus promotional fares appear on selected routes, for example Kuala Lumpur from S$145 and Seoul from S$390. Those include more cabin and checked bag allowance than Economy Basic; the exact inclusions show in the booking flow.

What the Basic fare does not include

Economy Basic still covers cabin baggage within Scootâ??s published limits, but checked bags, meals and seat selection are add-ons unless you move up a bundle. Promo tickets are generally non-refundable and do not earn frequent-flyer mileage. Payment fees and optional extras sit outside the headline fare.

Leave-math before you lock hotels

Malaysia and Thailand windows open from about 29 September or 1 October 2026 in several slices through mid-2027. Japan and Korea lean later, with more dates clustered in early 2027. Check the eligible travel dates for your city on Scoot before you book a non-refundable hotel.

A weekend hop works for Melaka or Penang if the fare and bags still fit your budget. Tokyo, Seoul or Sydney usually need leave days once you stack flight time and jet lag. Europe also appears on the same sale board, with Athens listed from S$315 and Vienna from S$325 one-way. Those are longer leave trips, not a Saturday-Sunday return from Changi.

The sale closes 11.59pm on 20 September 2026.
