

Dry Chilli Mee Pok and Home Made Fishballs     Ru Ji Kitchen (Redhill)

Description

I met a friend for breakfast at Redhill Food Center. I wanted to try a fried carrot cake stall recommended by my friend, but it was closed (I shall do that again).

I saw this busy stall selling fishball noodles. It seemed to be featured on many food blogs and mainstream media.

The wait was manageable. I ordered the dry mee pok with chilli. (as recommended).

default watermark

This was what I got for the $4 portion.

default watermark

The noodles had a firm, chewy text to it, not too soggy. It was coated with the fragrant chilli oil and sambal.

default watermark

I think the highlight of the stall is their bouncy fishballs. These are handmade, and the taste and texture are pleasantly different from those you get off supermarket shelves.

default watermark

All in all, it was a delightful bowl of noodles for breakfast.

My verdict:

Taste: 3.5/5 (I would go back for the fishballs)

å!?'è®°å°•å?' Ru Ji Kitchen

85 Redhill Ln, #01-25, Singapore 150085

Open till 1am daily (closed on Mondays)

For the latest deals and content, join our Telegram channel here today!

Date Created

17/12/2023

Author

kevinyeo

default watermark