The 12th edition opens 9am to 5pm both days at 10 Bayfront Avenue. The five shows are Cloud & AI Infrastructure Asia, DevOps Live, Cyber Security World Asia, Big Data & AI World Asia and Data Centre World Asia. Register once and you can move between all five halls; a commercial delegate pass is the route if you sell tech products or services. Commercial delegate passes cost S$99 plus GST and fees until today, 28 September, and S$199 plus GST and fees on site.

Mainstage names

Senior Minister of State for Digital Development and Information Tan Kiat How is on the mainstage line-up, alongside speakers from Google DeepMind, INTERPOL, NVIDIA's AI Technology Center, AI Singapore and Standard Chartered. Conference sessions are free for registered visitors and run on site only. Sessions are not livestreamed, and slides are shared only if individual speakers agree.

Registration and getting there

Sign-up is open on singaporetechnologyweek.com and needs a business email. Gmail and other personal domains are rejected at the form. After registration, a confirmation email carries a QR code. Scan it at a self-serve kiosk from 9am on either show day to print a badge. Under-18s are not allowed in the exhibition halls. Dress code is business or smart casual; shorts, singlets and slippers are turned away at the door.

Bayfront MRT (CE1/DT16) is the nearest station. On event days, parking at Marina Bay Sands can drop to a S$12.84 nett flat coupon if you present a visitor badge at the Level 1 Concierge near Hall A before 6pm.
