

When Art Meets Nature: A Free Immersive Exhibition for Families at National Gallery Singapore

Description

National Gallery Singapore is set to transform its spaces into a landscape of textures, sounds and colour with When Art Meets Nature: Reimagining Nature Through Art and Play, a new immersive presentation opening on 30 April 2026. Running until 1 November 2026, this free exhibition invites children and families to discover the natural world through multi-sensory experiences.

Co-curated by the Taoyuan Museum of Fine Arts and National Gallery Singapore, the presentation brings two works from the exhibition's first showing in 2025 at the Taoyuan Children's Art Center in Taiwan to Singapore, offering local audiences a rare opportunity to encounter them up close.

Two Nature-Inspired Installations

Peace Forest by Soh Ee Shaun

Singaporean artist Soh Ee Shaun reimagines an immersive forest ecosystem populated with soft sculptures of endangered animals and lush botanical forms. Inspired by the artist's encounters with nature during walks near his home where he spotted birds, insects and even a flying lemur resting on a mango tree, Peace Forest offers families a restorative space for open-ended play, observation and discovery.

Peace Forest by Singaporean artist Soh Ee Shaun. Image from Toisland Project

Where the River Runs by Yenting Hsu

Taiwanese artist Yenting Hsu draws visitors into a sound-led experience shaped by the indigenous stories and traditions of communities living along Taiwan's Dahan River. Using sound as her primary medium, Hsu explores the boundaries between documentary and fiction, narrative and imagination. In this work, waterways become vessels of cultural memory, ecological knowledge and coexistence.

Where the River Runs by Taiwanese artist Yenting Hsu. Image from Toisland Project

A Celebration of Cross-Cultural Artistic Dialogue

Bringing together cross-cultural artistic perspectives rooted in ecological thinking, When Art Meets Nature fosters environmental awareness and reflects National Gallery Singapore's ongoing commitment to regional artistic dialogue and lifelong engagement with art.

The exhibition is perfect for families with young children looking for an engaging, educational and immersive outing. The installations encourage imaginative exploration, active participation and quiet reflection – making it a wonderful way to introduce children to both art and environmental awareness.

Visitor Information

When Art Meets Nature runs from 30 April to 1 November 2026 at the City Hall Wing, Level 1, City Hall Alcove and Keppel Centre for Art Education. Admission is free.

National Gallery Singapore is located at 1 St Andrew's Road, Singapore 178957, and is open daily from 10am to 7pm.

For more details, visit the National Gallery Singapore website.

Looking for more things to do? Read about the Indian Heritage Centre's Indian New Year Open House this weekend or check out Singapore Zoo's new Sri Lankan leopard cubs.

Date Created

17/04/2026

Author

teamlbrd